NOVEL CASE ARISES.

Men Said to Have Been Convicted

After Indictments Dismissed.

After Indictments Dismissed.
Guard J. W. White brought in five prisoners to the pentientiary yesterday from Wise county, charged with breaking into a box-car. They were Neison Castic Jasper Absher, Delaney Bolling, Will Logan and Pearl Wimbush.

An interesting question arose, which caused Mr. White at first to decline the prisoners, but he later brought them in. It seems that after being indicted two of them made their escape and pending their recapture the indictments against them were dismissed.

Mr. White raised the point that the men were not properly in his possession as prisoners, but he finally brought them here and they are all locked up.

The penitentiary authorities know nothing of the court proceedings in the case, and they say the men come to them on papers properly fixed up.

Little is known of the matter here, the above meagre facts having been taken from the Wise County News.

and parior decorations in pins and white were faultiess. The dining-room, with its soft, mellow lights and lovely flowers, including "the last rose of summer," was a complete bower of beauty and enchantment. Miss Habilston, sister of Mr. W. M. Habilston, of Richmond, and Mrs. J. D. Kupert, the mother of Mrs. Hillyer, assisted in receiving.

The gathering consisted in part of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Goodwin, Miss Juffac Goodwin, Miss Juffac Goodwin, Miss Ada Davis, Lilfian Durrett, of Missouri; Miss Winffrede Goodwin, of Augusta; Miss Tennant, of Baltimore, and Mrs. A. Garrett Trice, all descendants of the Goodwin family, which is one of the oldest in the State, whose genealogy has been so recently, by request, given to the public.

A pecular coincidence concerning the Missouri party, who are on Virginia soil for the first time in their lives, is that about sxty-eight years ago, their father being of an inquisitive turn of mind, young and full of adventure, turned his eyes toward the setting sun, and set out in wagons, seeking a fortune in other and unknown lands, leaving home and comfort, friends and relatives, and making a journey of thirteen hundred miles, settling in northern Missouri. He carried with him his numerous slaves, other goods and chattels, and bought kinds for twelve and one-half cents per acre, that now cannot be had for $100 per acre. The elder Goodwin, now ninety-two years of age, is hale and hearty, and has vivid recollections of his mother State as she was sixty-eight years ago, and of his overland trip in 1837, when he crossed the Blue Ridge, spanned the beautiful Valfey of the Shenandosh, ascended the Alleghanies, and entered into the great plains beyond. plains beyond.

YORK STATE FOLKS HAS NO VILLAIN

The Bijou Audience Resented This, But the Play Made a Hit.

The performance of "York State Folks," the pretitiest pastoral play that has been presented upon the Bijou stage, was marred hist night by the unseemity conduct of a portion of the audience. It is most difficult to present a play of this type in a house in which the majority of the audience expects the "curses on the villian" sort of lines, which are the rule rather than the exception. In the first place, "York State Folks" has no villian—a sore disappointment to the gallery, which, however, was not the only portion of the house to annoy the audience at the Bijou last night.

The character of Simon Poter Martin is drawn along lines somewhat similar to the role of Dunstan Kirke, and the iron-hearted brother in "Shore Acros." Mr. James Lackinge portrayed the role of Simon in a most forceful manner, and, though the gallery tried to make him the villian, in lieu of any other, the larger portion of the house drowned the hisses that came from the topmost tier, in hearty applause in appreciation of his work. Ray L. Royce was no less clever, in his impersonation of Myron Cooper, a lovable, gentle character, the exact opposite of Simon.

These character portrayals alone would have almost made a success of the production. But there were other characters; indeed, quite a number, nearly all representing village typos, and each perfect in point of make-up.

The play has no strong melodrammite seenes, and the climaxes are quiet. It depends for success upon depicting the home-like seenes of a New York village, and some others, but it is the best play of its type that has over been produced upon the Bijou stage.

The President's refusal to be swayed by the feur of personal risk which so many influences have pressed upon him, has further commended him to the people of Louisiana, and there is on every side a disposition to make his reception markedly cordial.

Mayor Behrman said to-day that the arrangements for the reception would be pushed with enthusiasm, and that he felt confident that the Fresident would find himself as safe in New Orieans on October 26th as if he were then in his own home. If he desires to do so during his brief stay the Fresident will be permitted to visit the Emergency Hospital, which Dr. White and his associates of the Marine Hospital Service regard as perhaps the place in the city most certainly proof against the danger of infection.
